

🔗 Appliquez les stratégies pour comprendre la suite du texte : complétez les deux tableaux.

Steve and Kevin relied on each other to navigate Cambridge, an untried terrain for these two working-class boys, Steve from East London and Kevin from Basildon in Essex. So that at the sherry reception to meet the Mistress of the college, Steve nudged Kevin as he told her, “Me and my friend we want to...” but too late, she corrected him and said “You mean, my friend and I.”

In those days, Steve wore a green bomber jacket, Doc Martens boots, and a West Ham football scarf. This look of urban toughness was at once defeated because his grandmother had knitted STEPHEN across his scarf, as you would for a five-year-old.

The two of them quickly became the comics in our group. They regaled us with wildly exaggerated impersonations of characters from their local neighbourhoods, savouring the knowing that in Cambridge they would not be maimed for this, as they would be back home.

Sonali Deraniyagala,
Wave. A Memoir of Life after the Tsunami, 2013.