Art, whatever its form, can have a strong impact on people's emotions.

Personally, I cry every time I watch my favourite TV series. However, can art actually change the way people think?

I'm not convinced that art can really change people's minds about anything. In my opinion, it can only inform you, or reinforce what you already think. As far as I'm concerned, we are essentially attracted to the art that reflects our thoughts, although I'm prepared to admit that it may depend on the art and on the person.

To conclude, it seems to me that art is a unique and personal experience, appreciated by most people, but we are who we are and we think what we think, regardless of art.
