So they'd act the thief who stole the neighbour's TV and displayed it in his own living room – even though the neighbour was a friend who often popped over for a chat (and probably to watch Crimewatch UK, who knows). Or “hard men” who strutted the street saying, “You looking a’ me or chewing a brick?” and were affronted if you looked them in the eye. And those with ambitions to make it big in the world of crime – wannabe bank robbers and bare-knuckle fighters who lived by the code of not “grassing up” friend or foe to the law.
